This chapter addresses a number of issues which relate to the construction over time and space of professional discourses within the practice of nursing. Discussion of these issues draws on the now well-established construct of communities of practice, first developed by Jean Lave and Etienne Wenger (Lave and Wenger, 1991; Wenger, 1998) and now extensively adopted across a range of social, educational, human and management disciplines. One objective of the chapter is to draw on the ...

Avoid the commute with these work from home nursing jobs. Nurses today work in a wide variety of settings including hospitals, physician offices, ambulatory care centers, urgent care clinics, and schools. But with the onset of COVID-19, more and more nurses are finding jobs that they can do without having to commute at all, especially since Medicare has temporarily expanded its coverage of telehealth services to respond to the crisis.
